

Symatrix Appoints Andrew Manley As Non-Executive Director

January 5th 2010, Symatrix, a leading provider of effective human capital management solutions, is pleased to announce the appointment of Andrew Manley to the board as a non-executive director.

Andrew brings an extensive and valuable skill set to the Symatrix board. Until recently he headed the global implementation of SAP for Royal Dutch Shell's downstream business, managing a project team of 4000 based in 42 countries around the world and was responsible for establishing Shell's Commercial and Project Management competency centre. Prior to this he held numerous international posts within Shell running their operations in South America, Indonesia and Canada undertaking a number of acquisitions on their behalf.

On the 3rd of December 2009 it was announced that following the approval of the Prime Minister, Andrew was appointed to the role of Director General Commercial in the Ministry of Defence. The role is accountable, amongst other things, for all of the MOD's commercial activities including the authority for the commercial aspects of the Defence Procurement process.

Andrew is a natural sciences postgraduate of the University of Wales and holds a Master of Business Administration from the London Business School

"We are extremely pleased to have Andrew on board" said Paul Gillott, Managing Director, Symatrix, "As we continue to grow, Andrew's extensive experience will be invaluable in helping us expand both the services and solutions that we offer and the markets that we serve."

"Symatrix is an impressive organisation that has achieved market leading position", said Andrew Manley, "I am excited to be joining the team and being part of their continued growth."
